People have peculiar customs. One of the most peculiar, perhaps, is a small economy that obtains in the outland district of Hawaii-not altogether because of any particular spirit of saving, so much as for the reason that in remote districts a man is sometimes cut off from supplies of things that are in common reach where many people live, and so must resort to expedients to find substitutes to meet necessities.

For instance, many letters that come to business houses in Honolulu come in envelopes that have a strangely worn look. A little examination will show that these envelopes have been used before-and a closer inspection reveals the fact that the last user, when his letter originally came to him, instead of tearing the envelope open, as the usual habit is, has carefully steamed the gummed parts, and has then turned the envelope itself inside out, gummed it together again, and thus made a receptacle in which, in turn, he mails his answering letter.

Hard work? Of course. But what is a man to do when he is miles from a store, and a letter calls for an immediate reply?

HIS LAST SERMON.

BY G. B. BURGIN.

Although in the early days of their settlement at Four Corners, "Old Man" Evans and Ikey Marston did not "go much on religion," in virtue of their official positions as sheriff and deputy sheriff they both considered it ought to have a "fair show."

In these circumstances, it may be imagined that "Old Man" and his familiar were much concerned when the Rev. Eliphalet solemnly announced to them that he had very little longer to live. There was something wrong with his heart, and that something might kill him at any moment. What grieved him Furnished Cottage-Nuuanu St., most, however, was the barren result of

Rev. Eliphalet announced that he depended upon a final series of sermons to bring his congregation to a sense of 2-Story House-Lunalilo St., large their shortcomings. With much difficulty he preached four of the series to empty benches, and then, heartbroken by the spiritual torpor of Four Corners, Furnished House-8 rooms, cor. stated that the Rev. Archibald Graeme would occupy the pulpit on alternate

His florid eloquence and 1901 Young St. 22.50 rousing periods made a pleasant change from the feeble efforts of the dying man, and, in the charm of novelty, Four Cornerites forgot the raithful service of 30

The maidens admired the raven locks and saintly smile of the newcomer, especially when he called them "dear sisters," and said what an inspiration it HENRY WATERHOUSE was to see their fair faces look up to him as he preached. It is needless to state that he was unmarried. Many maidens in Four Corners were conscious of the Corner Fort and Merchant Streets, fact, and did their best to lead Rev. Archibald into the thorny paths of matri-

"Old Man" and Ikey alone failed to succumb to the spell of the new preacher, who, when he was not on matrimonial schemes intent, indirectly criticised his dying colleague's methods of preaching as somewhat old-fashioned. A grim smile pervaded "Old Man's" features. "I'll juss go for a ride on the naule"-he took his gun from the corner ernment will be closed on that day. -"and look up half of these jays. You look arter the other half, Ikey." "It's very kind of you to help me to get a congregation, although your efforts are not at all necessary, Brother Marston."

The next morning, at a quarter to 11, the inhabitants of Four Corners were surprised to see Ikey standing by the church door and counting their num- appropriations for the year ending bers. The congregation, however, would June 30, 1905, against the Executive have been still more surprised could it Department, the offices of the Govhave seen "Old Man" coming from the Rev. Archibald began the opening prayer so briskly that the congregation soon forgot the bent figure of Rev. Eliphalet, who rose to his feet with difficulty and clung to "Old Man's" arm. "Old Man" came down from the platform, tenderly led Rev. Eliphalet toward the pulpit, and, putting a glass of water by his side, handed him his notes. "Old Man," after casting an anxious glance at the trembling form of Rev. Eliphalet, advanced to the edge of the platform, his eyes filled with withering
